Religion constructs a sacred canopy, or all-embracing world order (Chapter 1). Producing sacred order is 'part of the same activity that produces society,' a result of consciousness that externalizes ideas (Chapter 2). The 'sacred canopy' is an all-embracing order that maintains society against chaos (Chapter 3).

In The Sacred Canopy he draws on elements from Marx, Durkheim, Weber, and others, creating a lively theoretical synthesis. One problem is raised by his method, however: he espouses what he calls “methodological atheism” in his work, which appears to presuppose a view about religion.

The Sacred Canopy | work by Berger | Britannica

“The Sacred Canopy,” while heavily informed by the ideas in “The Social Construction of Reality,” was written only by Berger himself. The book is a thoroughly Marxist critique of religion with a dash of Freud thrown in for good measure. The Marxism comes from Berger’s understanding of human consciousness.

Review of Thomas Berger's "The Sacred Canopy: Elements of ...

If the Sacred is a valid category in the study and teaching of religion, then what can be said about the antithesis of the sacred, namely the profane or the secular? This volume probes these questions with great care in order to justify a number of ways the Sacred can be construed as an indispensable notion for the study and teaching of religion.

Professor Berger, of The New School in New York, seeks in this volume to apply a general theoretical perspective derived from the sociology of knowledge to the phenomenon of religion. He does not intend the book to be a theological discussion, nor a sociology of religion, but to carry to final sociological consequences an understanding of religion as a historical product.
